

Digital Information & Records Management Capabilities

To help agencies transition to fully digital information management, the Archives has developed a guideline which outlines the capabilities agencies need. The Digital information and records management capabilities document contains a matrix to help you identify what information and records managers, ICT specialists and all staff should know so your organisation can manage digital information effectively... The matrix has been developed with the assistance of agency feedback and further comments and suggestions are welcome. Contact agencytraining@naa.gov.au if you have any comments.

This document can be used to develop position descriptions and selection documents. It will also assist in professional development, recruitment and performance management, as well as other areas of capability development such as induction and training programs, succession planning and learning pathways. The capabilities are mapped to four groups of position classifications commonly used in the Australian Public Service: APS 1 – 4; APS 5 – 6; EL1 – 2; and SES. The allocation of responsibilities and capabilities required for certain roles and levels varies considerably between agencies and the capability matrix should be adapted to reflect the business needs and size of individual agencies. It is expected that staff at higher levels will have the capabilities for lower levels as well as for their own level.

National Archives of Australia (NAA)

Description:

The Archives is responsible for advising all Australian Government agencies in improving digital information management for business efficiency and effectiveness and to ensure transparency and accountability.

Stakeholder(s):

Australian Government :

Australian Government agencies face significant challenges in managing their business information due to rapid advances in technology, the growing volume of information and the increasing complexity of the online environment. The National Archives of Australia is responsible for advising all Australian Government agencies in improving digital information management for business efficiency and effectiveness and to ensure transparency and accountability. A skilled and knowledgeable workforce is crucial to achieve fully digital information management.

Australian Government Agencies :

A skilled information and records manager is an essential element of every Australian Government agency. Information is a valuable asset and, like assets such as vehicles, buildings or money, requires a knowledgeable person or team to manage it.

Australian Public Service Commission :

This capability matrix focuses on skills and knowledge and can be used in conjunction with the Australian Public Service Commission Integrated Leadership System with its stronger focus on behaviours. It also complements the information and knowledge management family in the APS Job Family Model. The capabilities for ICT staff and managers can be used in conjunction with the Skills Framework for the Information Age (SFIA).

Records Managers :

Information and records managers need a wide range of abilities: they have to understand their agencies' business information needs; have experience with people and project management; be able to talk to and understand IT specialists; and be adaptable to the changing needs of their organisation. But information management is no longer the responsibility of a small group of skilled specialists. Most staff have some responsibility for managing information.
